Miracles and the Unexplained

"It seems to me that there is only one conceivable approach to these matters. If we have such an emotional stake in the answers, if we want badly to believe, and if it is important to know the truth, then nothing other than a committed, skeptical scrutiny is required." [When you buy a car, you thoroughly check it out before purchasing.] "You do this for something as unimportant as an automobile. But on issues of the transcendent, of ethics and morals, of the origin of the world, of the nature of human beings, on those issues should we not insist upon at least equally skeptical scrutiny?"

~Carl Sagan, The Varieties of Scientific Experience
