

Religious Liberty According to Christian Nationalists

- We are free to practice our faith anywhere at anytime in any way
- Our faith is protected from any interference from the government
- Our "sincerely held beliefs" give us the right to choose who we want to serve (we can discriminate if God wants us to)
- The government cannot tell us how and when to gather, even in a public health emergency (we deserve exceptional privileges)
- Our "biblical and family values" can, and must, shape legislation at all levels of government
- It is our right to receive public money just like any other group, even if we don't serve everyone ("school choice," playgrounds, historical preservation)
- Our faith deserves to be given special privileges in the public square (such as holiday displays, invocations, crosses on public land)
- America is a Christian Nation, under our God, so our faith has the freedom to take dominion and lead the country
